

138

Professor Dr J.J.J. Dalmulder

Applicant is Professor of Econometrics at the Catholic School of Economics at Tilburg and particularly interested in mathematical statistics and the philosophical and mathematical background. He made some interesting statistical studies of a more practical character, among others, concerning developments of the factors of production and the national product in the Netherlands between the two wars.

His students like him very much because of the simple and informal way he deals with his subject and because of the devotion to his educational task. Prof. Dalmulder already spent one or two terms at the Cowles Commission in its early years and is personally known to Prof. Koopmans of the university of Chicago. Having himself contributed much to the introduction of econometrics as a subject in the program of the School at Tilburg, he would like to inform himself on the new developments of this science as taught in Chicago.

Sijzenlaan 41, the Hague

Professor of Econometrics
at the Netherlands School of Economics
(Rotterdam)

26 October 1951

138

Professor Dr J.J.J. Dalmulder

Applicant is Professor of Econometrics at the Catholic School of Economics at Tilburg and particularly interested in mathematical statistics and the philosophical and mathematical background. He made some interesting statistical studies of a more practical character, among others, concerning developments of the factors of production and the national product in the Netherlands between the two wars.

His students like him very much because of the simple and informal way he deals with his subject and because of the devotion to his educational task. Prof. Dalmulder already spent one or two terms at the Cowles Commission in its early years and is personally known to Prof. Koopmans of the University of Chicago. Having himself contributed much to the introduction of econometrics as a subject in the program of the School at Tilburg, he would like to inform himself on the new developments of this science as taught in Chicago.

Professor of Econometrics
at the Netherlands School of Economics
(Rotterdam)
26 October 1951

Sijzenlaan 41, the Hague