My dear Frisch,

Thank you very much for the kind and useful message transmitted to me by Mr Vreede. Of course, I would not be a good econometrist if I would not do what you think useful. The difficulty only is that your own example makes me doubt a little bit what exactly you mean by "working too hard": I am still thinking of Oslo in terms of papers written overnight, dictaphones and very weighty papers ! I still have to thank you for the one I got quite recently and which, I may admit, I have not had the courage yet to look in. There are also other pictures from Norway which I don't forget: particularly the hills and the lake in the neighbourhood of your bee laboratory. Might you see one of these weeks Mr Nikolaussen and his family, please, give him my best regards. Of course, the same applies to Mrs Frisch and your daughter and , finally, to my colleagues at your Institute.

All best wishes,

Thank you very much for the kind and useful message concerning the use of the word "of course". I would not be a good educator if I would not do what you have asked. The difficulty only is that you can hardly make me think a little bit more exact in your use of "of course" for the sake of the thinking of the in terms of papers written over the last few years and very recently papers I still have to thank you for the one I got quite recently and which I was able to have not too long ago to look at.
There are also other papers from Norway which I don't forget.
Particularly the paper and the one in the neighborhood of your laboratory, which you see one of these years in discussion and the family, please, give him my best regards. Of course, the same applies
